Beware of the Vog!

When sulfur dioxide gas and other pollutants mix with oxygen and moisture in the air, vog is created. Simply put, vog is volcanic air pollution and has been known to cause headaches, breathing difficulties, increased susceptibility to respiratory ailments, watery eyes, sore throat, flu-like symptoms, and a general lack of energy. It also causes acid rain which is known to damage crops and can leach lead into household water supplies.

The following are a few suggestions to help you minimize your exposure to vog:

Be watchful for the vog-producing conditions of your area, most importantly wind direction and speed. Weather forecasts or visible changes in wind conditions are good indicators of upcoming air quality.

Keep outdoor physical exertion to a minimum during vogy days to decrease the amount of polluted air you breathe.

During vog episodes, stay indoors, with windows closed and air conditioner or dehumidifier (if available) on. Indoor air is typically less vog-polluted.

Drink plenty of fluids to help pass vog's bodily irritants out of your system. Hot, caffeinated tea, especially, is believed to stimulate clearing of the upper airway.

Don't smoke! It compounds vog's effects and, besides, life is already too short.
