Communicate Acceptance

When children know that you accept them, just as they are, they grow to feel good about themselves. When children feel good, it is more likely that they will get along well with others.

Say "Please" and "Thank You"

Children deserve the common courtesies which adults use with each other. And children learn by imitating the speech and behavior of adults. Set the example.

Listen Attentively

Get rid of distractions and pay attention to what your child is saying. At times adults may need to stop whatever they are doing and listen to their child. Caution: Do not pretend that you are listening when you aren't. If you're busy, tell your child, "I'm busy now, but let's talk about that later." Then be sure to follow through later.

Get Your Child's Attention Before You Speak

Children find it easier to concentrate on only one thing at a time. Call your child's name and allow time for him/her to turn attention to you before you speak. Wait for eye-contact, then give directions, make requests, or ask questions.

Communicate at Eye-Level

Eye-contact improves communication. When talking with very young children, it may be necessary to stoop down to their level or to sit at a table with them. Adults fail to realize the effect their size has on small children.

Monkey See

Monkey Do

"Monkey See Monkey Do" is a saying made popular in the 1920s and refers to a child's learning process. "Monkey See" refers to a child's observation of a behavior. "Monkey Do" refers to the imitation of the behavior. In a perfect world, children would be exposed to positive behaviors resulting in desired learned outcomes. However, our world is less than perfect so our children are exposed to negative behaviors as well.

Although we cannot shield our children from exposure to negative behaviors, we can make a difference by setting positive examples. But before we can set positive examples, we need to master the fine art of child and parent communication.

Make Requests Simple

Children often have a hard time remembering several orders at a time. When making requests of children, think about breaking them into small steps you can request one at a time.

Use "You-Messages" to Reflect Your Child's Ideas and Feelings

"You-messages" describe the child's feelings and encourage him/her to express troublesome feelings. When children are allowed to express bad feelings freely, the feelings seem to be less threatening. Hiding bad feelings is self-destructive. Remember: Actions can be labeled good or bad, but not feelings. Feelings are neither good or bad. They exist, and their existence must be recognized.

Use "I-Messages" to Communicate Your Thoughts and Feelings

"I-Messages" are statements of fact. They tell the child how his/her behavior makes the adult feel. Often children don't know their behavior affects others.
